From Assistant Coach Jenni Deltz:

"After playing softball for four years at Piedmont I am excited to work with the girls as assistant coach. Each year we get better and take our level of play up a notch. I am excited about the group of girls that we brought in this year and think that with the girls from last year we will accomplish great things if they play to their abilities. I hope they will have as many great memories of this college and the softball program as I do."

TALKING WITH

"While I have had acting nightmares all my life, I have never acted in a play. I did not intend to try out for "Talking With..." either, but after two students showed me the monologue entitled "Lamps," written for a 65-year-old woman named Lila, I could not get her out of my mind. She was lonely, funny, quirky, resourceful. She shared the stage with more than a dozen lamps, which she turned off one by one as she recounted the steady loss of intimacy in her life. When I listened to some younger actors read her part, I thought that Lila needed me as much as I needed her. I was, after all, the oldest person in the room. Before I knew it, I was up on the stage, blind with fear, and the next thing I knew, I had the part. I doubt that I will ever tread the boards again, but neither will ever forget the experience of sharing that play, that stage, that dressing room and those nights with such a remarkable group of women. I am forever grateful to Mary Emily for giving me the chance to do that, to Jane Martin for giving me the words, and to Lila for lending me her life."

Golf team finishes in top-10 at NCCAA Tournament

By Rick Winters

The Piedmont College men's golf team arrived at The Hombre Golf Course in Panama City Beach, Florida, on October 11, to compete in the National Christian College Athletic Association Tournament. In the 21-team field, the Lions were determined to do better than last year's 11th place finish.

After the first day of the tournament it looked as though Piedmont had a good chance of finishing in the top five, shooting a team score of 314, 16-over par, for sixth place.

Fr. Kyle Shelnut led the Lions shooting a five-over, 77. Fr. Stephen Giddens recorded a six-over, 78; So. Drew Brady shot a seven-over, 79; and Sr. Dusty Rogers finished off the team score with an eight-over, 80. On the second day of the tournament, the Lions shot a team score of 315, 17-over par; however, the team was able to hold on to the ninth place finish.

Shelnut led the Lions on the second day, along with Brady, shooting another five-over, 77; Giddens recorded an eight-over, 80; and Rogers again finished up the scoring, shooting a nine-over, 81. Fr. Matt Goodall also competed in the tournament shooting a 13-over, 85, and a 15-over, 87. However, only the top four scores could be counted in the team competition.

"We improved two spots this year, earning the golf team's first-ever top-10 finish at the NCCAA tournament," says Head Coach Lee Glenn, "We were also able to win two team championships and two individual titles early in the season, which was an added plus."

The NCCAA tournament marked the end of the fall season for the golf team.

GERMANY

There are many events that lead to personal growth; as far as I am concerned a trip touring Hitler's Germany qualifies as one. I took part in a trip across Germany and Austria that has been one of the turning points in my life.

The excitement I felt in going to Europe was only doubled by my mother's excitement. I was able to both enjoy my time abroad and take joy in seeing her happiness as we took our expedition into a different world.

The cultural differences I noticed began at customs in the Munich airport. I was greeted (if you want to call it greeted) by a young man. His expression led me to believe that he either didn't care for his line of work or he was just in a bad mood. Never before in my life had I been considered a foreigner and to be perfectly honest, I didn't care for it much.

In Munich, we visited the Virgin's column, a statue that depicts the angels of catholicism defeating the beasts of Protestantism. Standing at the base of the column, I came to realize that for over three decades, Christians killed one another over a difference in beliefs. I decided then and there that I would begin to love all people regardless of their beliefs or their religious practices.

Some of the best food I have ever had was in Munich. When we were visiting the Victualienmarkt, a medieval market that is still open today, we ate lunch and I had what had to be some of the best sausage in the world. Touring Hitler's Germany meant we visited many areas that Hitler influenced and were important in his rise to power. One of these places was the beer hall (Weisses Brauhams,) where Hitler met with the original members of the Nazi party in 1920. I was in the same building that Hitler was in when forming the Nazi party and that was very powerful.

We were able to visit the concentration camp in Mauthausen on the way to Vienna. I walked through the gas chambers and the ovens where so many people were brutally murdered. While I was there, I couldn't help but feel a sort of disappointment in the human race. I could not understand what would drive someone to believe that a group of people deserved to be exterminated. I began to look back at America's past trials such as slavery and the civil rights movement and I felt such shame for our people as well.

We left the injustice of Mauthausen and made our way to Mittenwald, Germany. Dr. Charles had told us that Mittenwald had been called the most beautiful city in all of Germany. The small village with little streams running through the center and with mountains surrounding it on all sides was breathtaking. Mittenwald served as the headquarters for Hitler's Alpine Division and Hitler took violin lessons there in 1925.

The best part of the trip for me was Platt, Austria, where I was in awe of the most beautiful mountains I had ever seen. These were real mountains, not the so-called "mountains" of north Georgia. One of the mountains was used by Julius Caesar, Napoleon Bonaparte, and Hitler to train their troops. Using the same trail as the soldiers before me, I climbed this mountain thinking that after training here all three of these leaders conquered Europe.

After Platt, we made our way to Garmish-Partenkirchen and then to Vienna after a short stop in Salzburg. In Vienna one of the first stops we made was at St. Stephen's church. In order to pay for restoration, the church allowed advertising from atop the building. It seemed to me that St. Stephen's had become more of a tourist attraction than a place of worship. Quite frankly, it made me sick to my stomach.

At the church of the Teutonic Knights, built in 1190, Heinrich Himmler spent seven days and formulated his "final solution." I learned here that hatred towards the Jewish people extended back for many centuries.

Our last stop was in the city of Berlin; a modern city like Atlanta where everyone was on the move. There we saw the Brandenburg Gate, which is where East and West Berlin met when the Berlin Wall was torn down in 1989.

I have to admit, when we arrived in Atlanta I was extremely happy to hear the English language again, and to be able to read signs. I let the man at customs know that I was glad to be back in my homeland. I thoroughly enjoyed my time in Europe and wouldn't trade it for anything in the world, but it helped me realize that I love America. The journey gave me a new perspective on life, and hopefully I can understand the human race a little better.

"I started working on the yearbook as a part of my LA 101 class last year and just kinda stuck with it. Sometimes it can be overwhelming being the only assistant to the editor and the only student besides Sarah working on the book, but most of the time things run smoothly."

Which of your college books will you still have 20 years from now? 50 years from now? I'd venture to say that for most, this 2004-05 edition of the The Yonahian will be one of the few hardbacks still gracing your bookshelves when the year 2055 rolls around. In fact, the way electronic books are taking over, it may be the only paper-and-ink book many of you will own by the mid-century- a quaint reminder of the way things used to be. Well, the printing of books on paper is not the only technology that may be on its way out. Kodak this year announced that after more than a century of leading the industry, it would stop selling traditional film cameras. And an even newer technology, the venerable VCR, was outpaced by DVD sales for the first time this year. (Those of you reading this 50 years from now will just have to look in your history book, I mean history e-book, to see what VCRs and DVDs are!) When you do look back at this yearbook, 20 or even 50 years from now, I know you will smile at the memories it records, but more importantly, look at the spirit it preserves. Even as you change throughout the years, think about how that Piedmont spirit has stayed with you and helped you through challenges that today, in 2005, you would never have predicted.

C. T. Davis: He Floated When He Walked

In the summer of 2003, two dogs took up residence at my house (with my permission). It was late fall when I noticed that they had worn a path across the yard.

The path runs in a straight line from the dog food in the shed to the water bowl by the house. The dogs' travels back and forth created a permanent fixture in the landscape.

During the winter, the trail was a worn place in the brown leaves and grass, but in the spring it took on a different effect. The conditions of the spring and early summer created a bumper crop of clover in my yard. Between the time the yard was mown and before the blanket of clover reappeared there was a day or two when all that remained of the clover was along the dog's path. Because the path was worn down below the level of the yard, the clover that grew immediately along the sides of the path was spared from the blades of the mower. What had previously been just a track in the yard became a charming pathway down which faeries and dogs could pass. The dogs were oblivious to their cuteness, wearing ankle-length ruffs as they padded through the deep clover.

This clover path appeared in my yard about the time that my co-worker and friend, C.T. Davis, was critically injured in a pedestrian accident. I remember looking at the path of clover and thinking of him. I did not know why I connected the two.

C.T. passed away July 29, 2004. Distinctive in many ways, one of the mannerisms for which I will remember C.T. was his walk. He floated when he walked.

CT walked slowly and deliberately. He took small steps and held his head high, often carrying in one hand a bag, and in the other, these past two years, a cane. To see C.T. in motion was to see a ship of state sailing the water. Through Demarest he walked - to the post office, the café, or the hairdresser's. He walked to work, often stopping first to chat with friends in offices or to eat a meal in the dining hall before reporting for duty. It was as if he were drawn by a thread on a track from place to place, the places that made up his life.

It is in this way that I relate C.T. to the clover path. We are all on a track through life from birth until death. We know not how it starts or where it shall end. The path can be purposeful or aimless.

The little track that we tread changes both from moment to moment and over a lifetime, even while it sometimes seems unchanging. The track can seem barren and lifeless, uneventfully overgrown with our travels from the house to the store to work and back again. Landmarks along the way mark not so much progress as moments of importance, landmarks such as accidents and death. Other times it is a charming path bordered on each side by sweet clover. We travel the path individually, but we are not alone.

May my friend and co-traveler on this path rest in peace. I am indebted to him for sharing the path with me.
